

TURNING OVER A NEW LEAF The last leaves of autumn flutter past the striking facade of a private residence in the heart of London's Mayfair Conservation Area. The upper levels of the building are clad in a metallic shingle taking the form of leaves on a vine. Architecture practice Squire and Partners took inspiration from a nearby property that is enveloped in Virginia creeper. Completion of the project, for client Central Investment Properties, is due to be this spring.

By Gareth Gardner / Photography + Journalism / garethgardner.com

