

NEWS

Squires unveils King's Cross apartment block

By Tom Lowe | 28 April 2021

Flats overlook central park at Argent development

Squire & Partners has completed a 61-home development in London's King's Cross.

The 11-storey block has been called Luma, a name which the architect said was chosen because of the emphasis on light in its design.

Facing on to Lewis Cubitt Park, the homes range from studio flats on its lower floors to a pair of 2,200sq ft penthouses, known as 'Dawn' and 'Dusk', split across three levels on its upper storeys, while its middle levels house '1.5' storey apartments featuring mezzanine living spaces.

The design features repeating latticed patterns on both its facades and throughout its interior, a motif said to have been inspired by the converging railway tracks of the nearby rail hubs.

Also on the project team was interior designer Conran and Partners and landscape architect Tom Stuart-Smith.

Buildings, design and specification Housing Squire & Partners UK

ADVERTISEMENT

Most popular Most commented

Sunderland gives permission to Vaux Brewery homes

Dramatic listing saves art deco cinema mentioned in Beatles song

Dixon Jones founders pay £98,000 redundancy bill from own pockets

Eric Parry's £170m Fleet Street 'justice quarter' approved 1

Westminster green lights controversial Ebury Estate redevelopment 1

We need to talk about greenwash 1

What you need to know about the new draft fire risk appraisal specification 1

Assael clears planning for £144m scheme above Nine Elms tube station 1

Sanaa unveils major expansion for Sydney art museum 2

RSHP wins Chinese airport terminal job