An Enticing Penthouse in King's Cross

Conran and Partners, founded by iconic British designer Terence Conran, has just completed work on the 10th-floor penthouse at LUMA, a new residential tower in London's King's Cross.

"An ode to the rich cultural history of the area," per developer Argent, the spacious 2,200-square-foot home juxtaposes dramatic industrial design with moments of tranquility, using a warm, nature-inspired palette of earthy tones, wood, and stone.

Nestled atop a building designed by architecture studio Squire & Partners, the penthouse includes four bedrooms, as well as a 550-square-foot private roof terrace with sweeping views of London and architectural greenery by Botanical Boys.

The decor, which includes classic Pierre Jeanneret Kangaroo Lounge chairs and a Dick Cordemeijer-designed Cleopatra daybed, "is entirely bespoke," according to lead designer Simon Kincaid, "with every item intentionally sourced and curated especially for this particular property."
