

Kings Cross penthouse

From courthouse to hotel: explore the new NoMad London in Covent Garden

Butterfly' midcentury house in New

Sou Fujimoto rethinks the 'tower' for

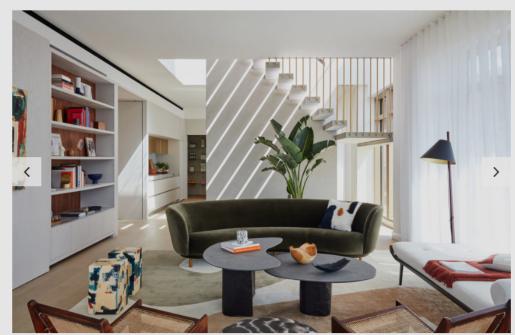

Guests can spend the night at Gaudí's Casa Vicens this autumn

INTERIORS I BY THE SPACES TEAM

Inside Conran & Partners' tranquil Kings Cross penthouse

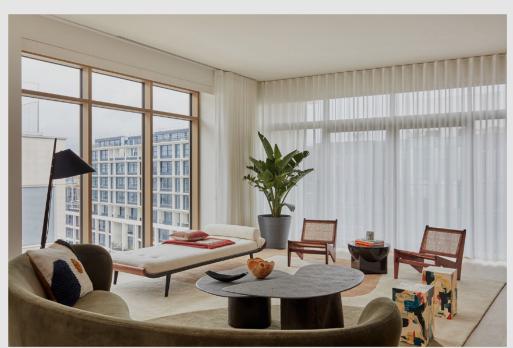

Photography: Philip Durrant

Natural materials including wood and stone take centre-stage inside Conran & Partner's serene penthouse apartment at the LUMA residential building in King's Cross.

The freshly unveiled 2,200 sq ft apartment occupies the 10th floor of the Squire & Partners-designed building, part of the third and final stage of construction at the central London neighbourhood. Conran & Partners conceived the four-bedroom space as a den of tranquillity, drawing inspiration from the building's parkside setting the mould its modern interiors.

Photography: Philip Durrant

Double-height ceilings in the living room and entertaining space amplify the feeling of lightness honed by the studio's soothing earthy colour palette. A limestone and fluted metal staircase anchor the space, connecting the ground floor to the bedrooms above. Its vertical balustrades cut shafts of light from the windows to create delicate shadow-play across the timber floors and white walls of the London apartment.

Conran & Partners's curation of furniture is similarly delicate: Pierre Jeanneret's rattan-backed kangaroo loungers sit opposite a moss-coloured velvet sofa, with a pebble-like Benoit Viaene coffee table in the middle. It's a dark counterpoint to the monumental limestone island in the kitchen.

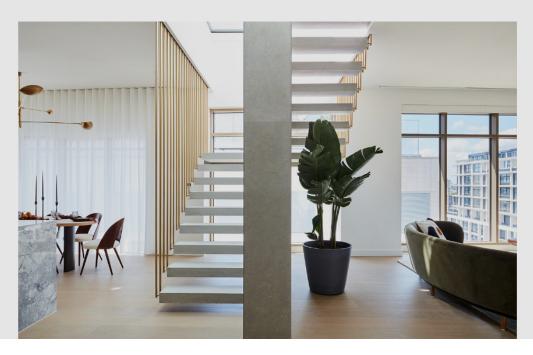

Photography: Philip Durrant

Simon Kincaid, partner at Conran & Partners said: 'It was really key to us that the space felt like a home, rather than a show home, scattered with pieces that one might have collected throughout their years.'

A further gem is the apartment's 550 sq ft private roof terrace, which gazes out over architectural gardens designed by Botanical Boys.

Take a closer look.

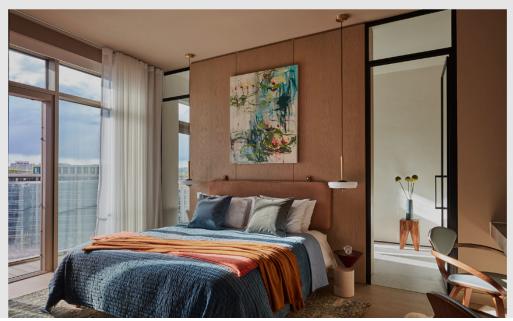

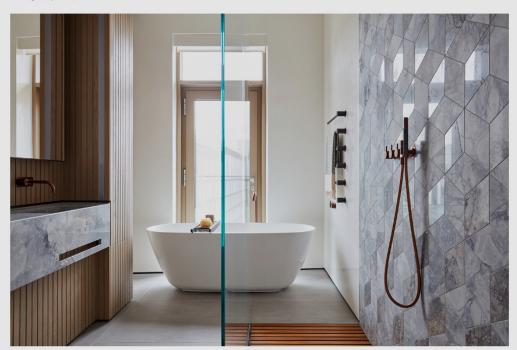

Photography: Philip Durrant

Photography: Philip Durrant

Photography: Philip Durrant

Photography: Philip Durrant

Black concrete and steel chime inside this London warehouse conversion

TAGS: CONRAN & PARTNERS | CONRAN AND PARTNERS | INTERIOR DESIGN | INTERIORS

SHARE THIS STORY

f Facebook

y Twitter

RELATED STORIES

INTERIOR

Interior inspiration to kick-start your week

INTERIORS

Interior inspiration to kick-start your week

NEWS, TRAVE

You can now check in at the Palace of Versailles

INTERIORS

Interior inspiration to kick-start your week